

The need for advanced characterization tools in food processing and packaging industry

In development and quality assurance reliable material analysis and characterization methods are of prime importance.

Lately more advanced virtual engineering methods calls for more advanced material characterization to have the adequate input parameters.

This and the possibilities to have in situ and dynamic processes studied at ESS and MAX IV make these facilities very interesting for the food processing and packaging industry.

Primary author: QVARFORD, Mats (Tetra Pak)

Presenter: QVARFORD, Mats (Tetra Pak)